ClipMan Video Editor Apk + mod 1.0.0 for Android (MOD, NO ROOT). 11 Sep Psihologia Manipularii Cialdini Pdf Download. when it comes to talking to someone, most of the time you don't give. A man could be as beautiful as an angel, but he could be as dirty as the devil as well. TheQ: Improving throughput in a large SELECT query with an INDEX scan The following query is run several hundred times a second and takes 200 milliseconds in total. Can it be improved in time or in execution cycles in PostgreSQL 9.5.3?

SELECT a, b, c, d, e, f, g FROM table
WHERE a LIKE '%abc%' AND b LIKE '%def%' AND c LIKE '%ghi%' AND d LIKE '%jkl%'
CREATE INDEX ix_table ON table USING btree (a, b, c, d, e, f, g)

A: Did you see the plan? You are using Index Only Scan A: The 'punchline' is: Index Only Scan is only slightly more efficient than Index Scan. In reality it is much, much worse, because it might, depending on the cardinality, perform a sequential scan over the full table to find records that match. Usually, the Index Only Scan is way, way worse. So it seems the index is not used. If the cardinality is not too large (e.g. small tables, or tables with just one row), you could try a simple heuristic: Remove the words from the query in a separate array, do a simple array union with the array for the index entry, then search in the index. It isn't optimal though. With a real CPU-bound load of 300 rows / second, this could be done quite fast - but your query is still I/O bound (and I hope, not latency bound) so the benefit will be limited to a few %. So if your table is small enough, an Index Only Scan would be a better option than the slow Index Scan over an unuseful index.
